For Immediate Release:

Cable TV program on Medical Insurance Announced

Arlington, MA - With a new medical insurance law set to go into effect this Summer, self employed Arlington resident Glenn Koenig found himself wondering what to expect. As he began to ask questions of various state agencies about the requirements, it occurred to him that others would be interested in learning more about the new law as well.

As a result, he is now planning to produce a television program on the topic at the Arlington Studio on Thursday, May 24th. The program will be recorded that evening, in front of a live audience, for cablecast later this month and repeated over the summer. Koenig is currently lining up a panel of experts to shed some light on the new law, what will be required, and some of the options available to self employed people.

Although the whole topic of medical insurance and health care in general is a controversial one, the program will focus more on the practical side of complying with the law as it now exists and obtaining insurance coverage. If there is enough interest, Koenig says he will consider follow up programs to discuss some of the other issues involved.

Residents of Arlington and surrounding towns, especially the self employed, are encouraged to attend the program's recording session as audience members. The format of the program is still being finalized, but a short question and answer segment is currently planned.

Space in the studio is limited, so Koenig asks that you contact him for details about being included. He can be reached by phone at 781-646-7708 or by email at video@openeyesvideo.com More information is available at his web site, www.openeyesvideo.com
